“The work connects space, light, and its material. It draws from architectural language, a sequence of corridors, passageways, and the order of repeated colonnades to create a sense of depth and perspective. Each porcelain plane defines and reframes the space within, allowing light to define the interior. Light becomes part of the structure itself. As it changes, the porcelain shifts from opaque to translucent, revealing subtle variations in its tone and its capacity to transform light into form, and form into light. The work embodies the refinement of porcelain through a dialogue between light and form.”
